Following the odysseys of seven individuals and their families, Sachs chronicles events in Greece beginning in 2015 when Middle Eastern refugees flooded the country, and an ill-prepared international aid system broke down. Volunteers from around the world converged to provide assistance, sometimes causing more chaos than help, but ultimately the drive to care for our fellow humans is revealed.

Wilmington resident Dana Sachs is a journalist, novelist, and cofounder of the nonprofit Humanity Now: Direct Refugee Relief, which supports grassroots teams providing aid to displaced people. A former Fulbright Scholar, her writing has appeared in numerous publications, including The Wall Street Journal, National Geographic, and Mother Jones. She is the author of novels "If You Lived Here" and "The Secret of the Nightingale Palace," as well as three works of nonfiction, including the recently released "All Else Failed: The Unlikely Volunteers at the Heart of the Migrant Aid Crisis."
